

Fighting Malaria - Use of mosquito nets should be universalized

The death of several people in all the parts of India linked to an outbreak of dengue, chikungunya and Malaria has once again exposed the inadequacy of national public health programmes that aim to eliminate vector-borne diseases. Chikungunya and dengue have wreaked havoc. Surveillance for dengue and chikungunya in India presently captures only those patients that are laboratory confirmed at government identified sentinel hospitals, most of these are in the public sector.

According to the doctors if a person has a history of a chronic disease, it may get aggravated or re-activated by the chikungunya virus. Chikungunya itself does not kill. It is usually other diseases, in combination with chikungunya, that cause death. Chikungunya is not a life-threatening disease in general, but in rare cases leads to complications that prove fatal, especially in children and old persons. Dengue is clearly the disease which has eclipsed in malaria in terms of morbidity and mortality. Dengue fever affects close to 400 million people worldwide each year, with about 40% of the world's population being at risk of exposure and infection.

Malaria, Chikungunya and Dengue which cause lives. The fiasco in mosquito control is the key reason for the diseases and the governments' failure to take the controlling and eradication measures as year through process and only instant specific.

The preventive plan should be for bio-environment control, fogging, distribution of bednets, besides quick and effective treatment. The effort should be to control the vector (mosquito), or the disease causing agent, and the host (human).

Malaria disease is one of the worst public health crises the country has ever faced, endangering one in every six Indians. Death can occur in as little as three days if an FP infection is not properly treated. Nearly 50,000 people die in the country every year due to complications of the disease. While travelling to a malaria endemic zone, anti-malarial tablets may be prescribed to prevent contracting malaria. Immediate diagnosis and treatment can help prevent complications and death. Every time a case of malaria is reported, a mapping exercise is undertaken to intensify fog and spray the pesticides in all surrounding areas. Though an infectious disease, whether a person contracts malaria or not, also depends substantially on how clean the surrounding environments are. One of the major causes of mosquito breeding is water stagnation. Its rather shocking that Indians having knowledge about the excellent benefits of Neem and cowdung, has not done any research towards the same, in the prevention of malaria. Eliminating malaria is, and should be, a priority for the country, but grand pronouncements are meaningless as long as manipulated data distort our knowledge and bad governance impedes genuine attempts to fight the disease.

Recognition of mosquito breeding should be known to every adult & be taught in schools. Use of mosquito nets should be universalized. The present emphasis on mosquito repellants has done little to prevent mosquitoes from breeding. Instead of focusing on the cause we should try to prevent the mosquito from biting us!

U.S. judge sends ex-Trump campaign head Manafort to jail until trial

WASHINGTON: U.S. President Donald Trump's former election campaign manager, Paul Manafort, was sent to jail pending trial on Friday after being charged with witness tampering, the latest episode in his long fall from grace.

Manafort, a long-time Republican operative and businessman, is a target of Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russia's role in the 2016 election, and has been indicted on mostly financial-related charges, including conspiring to launder money and defraud the United States.

He pleaded not guilty on those charges and had been on home confinement in Virginia, required to wear an electronic monitoring device.

Mueller last week charged him with witness tampering in the case. Manafort pleaded not guilty to that charge on Friday but U.S. District Judge Amy Berman Jackson in Washington revoked his bail, sending him to jail.

"I have no appetite for this... But in the end, I cannot turn a blind eye," she said. "You've abused the trust placed in you."

Manafort turned around briefly to wave to his wife before heading out a door at the back of the crowded courtroom, witnesses said.

Manafort's spokesman did not respond to requests for comment on the decision.

Manafort's legal defence fund asked in a Twitter post, "Why is he the target of a partisan investigation?" echoing a theme of Trump and his supporters that the Mueller inquiry is a political witch hunt.

Trump said it was unfair to send Manafort to jail.

"Wow, what a tough sentence for Paul Manafort," Trump wrote on Twitter even though Manafort has not been sentenced - he has not been convicted on any of the charges. "Didn't know Manafort was the head of the Mob," Trump wrote. "Very unfair!"

Mueller, whose investigation has overshadowed Trump's presidency, is looking into whether any Trump campaign associates coordinated with Russia and if Trump unlawfully sought to obstruct the probe.

Moscow denies U.S. intelligence agency allegations that it interfered in the election and Trump denies collusion.

Manafort is due to go on trial in Washington in September and faces another trial on related charges in Virginia in July.

None of Manafort's charges refer to the allegations of Russian meddling and largely predate the two months he worked as Trump campaign head during which the businessman and former reality TV star won the Republican Party nomination.

Manafort has ties to a pro-Russian political party in Ukraine and a Russian oligarch close to the Kremlin.

The charges against him in Washington include failing to register as a foreign agent for the pro-Russia Ukrainian government under former President Viktor Yanukovich.

Manafort resigned in August 2016 following a news report he had received possibly illegal payments from Yanukovich's political party.

Hours after Manafort's bail was revoked on Friday, Mueller's office told the court it would introduce evidence at trial that Manafort sought to circumvent Ukrainian public procurement law by masking the size of payments to a U.S. law firm that wrote a report aimed at discrediting Yanukovich's chief political rival. A June 8 indictment accused Manafort and a longtime aide, Konstantin Kilimnik, with tampering with witnesses about their past lobbying for Ukraine. Kilimnik, whom Mueller's office says has ties to Russian intelligence, could not be reached for comment.

The indictment accused them of attempting to call, text and send encrypted messages starting in February to two people from a political discussion group - the so-called Hapsburg Group - that worked with Manafort to promote Ukraine's interests in a bid to sway their testimony.

Manafort's lawyers have argued that the evidence suggesting he tampered with witnesses is thin.

Mueller's filing said he may also introduce evidence showing that Manafort falsely represented business expenses on his tax returns and that Manafort, his business partner Richard Gates and Kilimnik structured loans between Cypriot companies they controlled to avoid recognising those funds as taxable income.

Legal experts say Mueller wants to keep applying pressure on Manafort to plead guilty and assist prosecutors as Gates did and is cooperating with the probe after cutting a plea deal.

"Either he can double down in his resolve to fight it or it's the last straw and it breaks his will and he decides to work out a plea bargain," Michael Zeldin, a former federal prosecutor, told Reuters.

Saved but still suffering, Aquarius migrants head for Spain

ROME - Saved from death at sea but denied a place to land by Italy, the 629 migrants rescued by the charity ship Aquarius have endured an additional 700 nautical mile-trip to Spain that one of the rescuers blamed on "idiotic" politics.

Italian Interior Minister Matteo Salvini, head of the far-right League party, who denied the Aquarius a safe harbour, said on Thursday the migrants had no right "to decide where to start and end their cruise". Having spent 20 hours in overcrowded rubber dinghies before being rescued after leaving the coast of Libya, and then a week on the Aquarius with an uncertain future, 4-metre (13 ft) waves added to the migrants' misery overnight, Max Avis, the deputy search-and-rescue chief on the ship, told Reuters. "The nurse was giving a vomit bag to a woman as she was breastfeeding her baby," Avis said. "We have the most vulnerable of the vulnerable on the ship right now, and instead of being taken care of and supported, they're being used... for some idiotic exercise of political influence."

The Aquarius incident has given Italy's new government a chance to assert its anti-migration credentials and has drawn both criticism and support from neighbouring countries in the European Union, which has failed to find an EU-wide solution to the challenge of huge numbers of

State Government would not tolerate divisive forces involved in disturbing social harmony: Jadeja

Ahmedabad, In the backdrop of an attack on a Dalit youth in Becharaji tehsil of Mehsana district on June 14, Minister of State for Home Mr. Pradipsinh Jadeja today asserted that it is utmost priority for the state government to maintain social harmony and harmonies among the different societies. The state government would take stern actions against such divisive elements.

Meanwhile, Chief Minister Mr. Vijaybhai Rupani expressed a feeling of sorrow over the sordid incident and instructed the administration to make a detail investigation into it. Adopting a sensitive approach towards the incident, the state government has made adequate police protection for the Dalit family.

On June 14, two youths from Darbar community had attacked the Dalit youth and beaten him with a bat and kicked with legs, along with verbal abuses, a video of which was made viral on the social media. Taking a serious note of the incident, the state government had instructed the superintendent of Mehsana district to pursue the victim's family to file a police complaint.

On the basis of their complaint, a case under the atrocity act, kidnapping, and I.T. Act was registered, Mr. Jadeja said.

He further stated that for judicious and fair investigation of the incident and prompt arrests of the culprits as many as 14 teams were formed under the direct supervision of district superintendent, rang IG, and state police chief Mr. Shivanand Jha.

The minister further added that the stern legal actions will be taken against those who are indulging in such incidents in the society. The state government would also take severe steps against elements involved in spreading misunderstanding between communities and places of religious faiths using the application such as Facebook, WhatsApp and other social media applications. Police department was also instructed to ensure the prevention of misuse of the social media.

Trump sets tariffs on $50 billion in Chinese goods; Beijing strikes back

WASHINGTON / BEIJING - U.S. President Donald Trump said he was pushing ahead with hefty tariffs on $50 billion of Chinese imports on Friday, and the smoldering trade war between the world's two largest economies showed signs of igniting as Beijing immediately vowed to respond in kind.

Trump laid out a list of more than 800 strategically important imports from China that would be subject to a 25 percent tariff starting on July 6, including cars, the latest hardline stance on trade by a U.S. president who has already been wrangling with allies.

China's Commerce Ministry said it would respond with tariffs "of the same scale and strength" and that any previous trade deals with Trump were "invalid." The official Xinhua news agency said China would impose 25 percent tariffs on 659 U.S. products, ranging from soybeans and autos to seafood. China's retaliation list was increased more than six-fold from a version released in April, but the value was kept at $50 billion, as some high-value items such as commercial aircraft were deleted.

Shares of Boeing Co (BA.N), the single largest U.S. exporter to China, closed down 1.3 percent after paring earlier losses. Caterpillar Inc (CAT.N), another big exporter to China, ended 2 percent lower. Trump said in a statement that the United States would pursue additional tariffs if China retaliates. Washington and Beijing appeared increasingly headed toward open trade conflict after several rounds of negotiations failed to resolve U.S. complaints over Chinese industrial policies, lack of market access in China and a $375 billion U.S. trade deficit. "These tariffs are essential to preventing further unfair transfers of American technology and intellectual property to China, which will protect American jobs," Trump said. Analysts, however, did not expect the U.S. tariffs to inflict a major wound to China's economy and said the trade dispute likely would continue to fester.
