Cricket As Mood-Setter

Cricket has become a national mood-setter for both India and Pakistan, especially when the two play against each other. After the Pakistani team lost to India in the initial stages of the just concluded Champions Trophy, it seemed like the former had conceded a military contest in the battlefield. A similar sense of gloom has pervaded here after Pakistan roundly outplayed India in the final of the tournament. All of this has to do largely with the hostile relationship the two countries share. And yet, should victory or defeat in cricket become a metaphor for dominance of one over the other? Is cricket not just a game which is to be won or lost, with no discredit to the losing team, at least not to the extent that it is seen as some sort of a great betrayal of nationhood or nationalism? Surely, neither the Pakistani nor the Indian players, when they face each other on the pitch, view it as such. Instead they are tuned in to the task at hand — which is to play well and win. Public pressure and perception on both sides, unfortunately, seek to determine that such is not the mindset; and that the cricketers are viewed as symbols of national pride and ought to be condemned if they let their country down. When this becomes the dominating, nay, domineering narrative, all sense of balance is lost. Of course, an India-Pakistan cricket match has an unmatched importance for both nations — particularly because a contest between them has been rare of late, and rarer in the final of a tournament. To the extent that it enlivens competition, a sense of jingoism on either side is not just inevitable but also welcome.

Adding More Value To India'S Babudom

It is a continuing debate as to whether domain expertise or at least some knowledge is essential, or excellent man management and commitment is adequate for a CEO to succeed in any organisation, be it in the manufacturing or the service sector. Erstwhile telecom czar Sam Pitroda's excellent track record of ushering in a telecom revolution more than two decades ago, was a classic example of domain expertise coupled with, commitment, superb man management and, last but not the least, firm political backing which saw him through thick and thin to deliver truly lasting results.

As Chairman of India's Telecom Commission, Pitroda

soon realised limitations of an advisory role when he could call the shots and decide key policies but unable to implement it on the ground, and opted to downgrade himself to Secretary of the Telecom Ministry in order to get things done in a time-bound manner. Pitroda also had the advantage of a long innings of more than six years, though under different Prime Ministers who were impressed enough by his technical expertise and commitment to provide unstinted support.

Similarly, Ram Vinay Shahi, with his domain knowledge and track record of managing BSES (Bombay Suburban Electricity Supply), in a new avatar as Secretary of the vital Power Ministry from 2002 to 2007, managed to bring about radical changes with his landmark Electricity Act of 2003, putting India's energy sector firmly on a path of sustained and meaningful growth.

E Sreedharan, a seasoned railway engineer, who was at the helm of Delhi Metro Rail Corporation (DMRC) for a almost a decade, changed the way commuters moved within the National Capital Region and its suburbs.

With a foot fall approaching the three million mark, the DMRC has introduced a fast, comfortable, safe, and pollution-free travel now being replicated in other metros. For his yeoman services, he was awarded the Padma Shri — followed a few years later by the Padma Vibhushan. He was also honoured as the Indian of the Year in public services, and Indian of the year by the television channel, CNN-IBN, before he bowed out.

Last but not the least is the success story of Aadhaar, conceived, planned in meticulous detail and implemented by Nandan Nilekani with his hand-picked team of equally brilliant and dedicated team, covering over one billion Indians within a short period of five years.

TransUnion surveyed 1,002 urban consumers in India about their credit and financial habits. The results of the survey indicate that nearly three quarters (74 percent) of consumers who took the survey check their credit score at least twice per year.

Respondents reported several motivations for checking their credit score. Nearly a third (29 percent) of the survey participants who have checked said they did so primarily to improve it, while another 28 percent checked in preparation for taking a loan or opening a new credit card.

"Checking your CIBIL score and report before applying for a loan or credit line is an important step, but that should not be the only approach to credit management," said Mr. Hrushikesh Mehta, Vice President and Head of TransUnion CIBIL's Direct-to-Consumer business. "To be truly financially healthy, monitoring the information in your credit report should be treated as a credit health management exercise and should be done on a regular basis."

The survey results suggest that, in general, urban Indian consumers care about achieving or maintaining good or excellent credit scores - a score of 750 or higher - even though they do not necessarily understand how it is used. (19-10)

India and Portugal Sign A Historical agreement to promote Cooperation in The Field of Archives

A Protocol of Cooperation was signed between the National Archives of India and the Minister of Culture of the Portuguese Republic in the field of archives on 17th May, 2017 in Lisbon, Portugal. As a first step under this agreement, the Torre do Tombo (National Archives of Portugal) handed over to the National Archives of India digital copies of 62 volumes of the collection known as 'Moncoes do Reino' (Monsoon correspondence). These volumes were originally part of over 456 volumes that cover the period from 1568 to 1914 and form the largest of all record collections in the Goa State Archives. The collection consists of direct correspondence from Lisbon to

Goa and is important primary source for the study of the Portuguese expansion in Asia, their trade rivalries with the Arabs and European powers and their relations with neighbouring Kingdoms in South Asia and East Asia. In 1777, these 62 volumes, consisting of over 12,000 documents, pertaining to the period from 1605 to 1651 were shifted from Goa to Lisbon where these were subsequently printed in under the title 'Documentos Remetidos da India' (Documents sent from India) by the Academy of Science at Lisbon between 1880 and 1893. The original volumes had remained in Lisbon ever since. After 240 years, this gap in the record series in the collection of the Goa
